

Marketing Concepts Notes

Socially Responsible Marketing

Introduction

Socially responsible marketing refers to marketing practices that consider profits along with the well-being of society, consumers, and the environment. It encourages organizations to balance business objectives with ethical responsibilities and long-term societal welfare.

Definition

Socially responsible marketing is a marketing philosophy in which organizations design, promote, and distribute products while considering ethical standards, consumer welfare, and societal interests.

Need

- Increasing consumer awareness – Consumers today prefer brands that follow ethical practices and demonstrate responsibility toward society and the environment.
- Government regulations – Laws related to consumer protection and environmental safety require companies to adopt responsible marketing practices.
- Building long-term brand trust – Ethical marketing strengthens brand credibility and encourages long-term customer loyalty.
- Social welfare – Businesses contribute to community development through responsible initiatives such as education and health programs.

Key Components

- Ethical marketing practices – Companies should ensure honesty and transparency in advertising and avoid misleading claims.
- Consumer protection – Products must be safe and reliable and provide accurate information to consumers.
- Environmental responsibility – Organizations should minimize environmental damage through sustainable production and resource conservation.
- Community engagement – Businesses participate in social initiatives that improve community welfare.

Examples

- Tata Group – Known for strong ethical values and CSR initiatives.
- ITC Limited – Rural development initiatives such as e-Choupal.
- Amul – Supports dairy farmers and promotes fair trade practices.

Cause Marketing

Introduction

Cause marketing involves promoting a social cause while marketing products or services. It aims to support social issues while strengthening brand reputation.

Definition

Cause marketing refers to marketing activities where companies promote a social issue along with their products to create social impact and improve brand perception.

Need

- Strengthening brand image – Associating with social causes improves public perception of the company.
- Emotional connection – Consumers feel more connected to brands that support meaningful social initiatives.
- Supporting social development – Businesses contribute to solving social issues such as health and education.
- Competitive differentiation – Cause-based campaigns help brands stand out in competitive markets.

Key Components

- Identification of a social cause – Companies select causes aligned with their values and mission.
- Integration with marketing campaigns – Promotional activities highlight the company's support for the cause.
- Partnership with social organizations – NGOs help ensure effective implementation of initiatives.
- Consumer participation – Customers support the cause through purchases or campaign participation.

Examples

- Lifebuoy – Hygiene awareness campaigns promoting handwashing.
- Hindustan Unilever – Health and sanitation campaigns.

Cause-Related Marketing

Introduction

Cause-related marketing links product sales with contributions to social causes. A portion of sales revenue is donated to charitable initiatives.

Definition

Cause-related marketing is a partnership between a business and a charitable cause where a portion of product sales is donated to support social initiatives.

Need

- Enhancing consumer trust – Customers appreciate brands that contribute to social welfare.
- Supporting charitable organizations – NGOs receive financial support through corporate partnerships.
- Increasing sales and loyalty – Consumers prefer brands associated with social causes.
- Strengthening reputation – Companies are perceived as responsible organizations.

Key Components

- Corporate-NGO partnership – Collaboration ensures effective implementation of the cause.

- Linking purchases to donations – A portion of product sales supports the social cause.
- Cause-based promotional campaigns – Advertising communicates how purchases help society.
- Transparency – Companies must clearly communicate how funds are used.

Examples

- Procter & Gamble – Shiksha campaign supporting education.
- Mamaearth – Tree planting initiatives linked to product purchases.

Internal Marketing

Introduction

Internal marketing focuses on treating employees as internal customers and ensuring they are motivated and trained to deliver better services.

Definition

Internal marketing refers to training, motivating, and communicating with employees so they understand and support the organization's marketing goals.

Need

- Improving service quality – Motivated employees provide better customer service.
- Increasing employee satisfaction – Supportive work environments improve engagement.
- Aligning employees with goals – Employees understand the organization's mission and strategies.
- Enhancing organizational culture – Positive communication improves teamwork and productivity.

Key Components

- Employee training – Enhances skills and knowledge required for effective service.
- Internal communication – Ensures employees understand organizational objectives.
- Employee motivation – Recognition and incentives improve performance.
- Leadership support – Management encouragement strengthens employee engagement.

Examples

- Infosys – Extensive employee training programs.
- Tata Consultancy Services – Strong employee engagement initiatives.
- HDFC Bank – Customer service training for employees.

Green Marketing

Introduction

Green marketing focuses on promoting environmentally friendly products and sustainable business practices.

Definition

Green marketing refers to marketing activities designed to promote products that minimize environmental harm and support sustainability.

Need

- Environmental protection – Businesses must reduce pollution and conserve natural resources.
- Consumer demand – Increasing preference for eco-friendly products.
- Government regulations – Environmental laws require responsible production practices.
- Competitive advantage – Sustainable practices improve brand reputation.

Key Components

- Eco-friendly product design – Products made with recyclable or biodegradable materials.
- Sustainable packaging – Reduced or recyclable packaging minimizes waste.
- Energy-efficient production – Use of renewable energy and efficient technologies.
- Green communication – Marketing campaigns highlight sustainability initiatives.

Examples

- ITC Limited – Carbon-positive sustainability initiatives.
- Tata Motors – Promotion of electric vehicles.
- Wipro – Green IT and sustainability programs.

Greenwashing

Introduction

Greenwashing occurs when companies falsely promote products as environmentally friendly to improve their image.

Definition

Greenwashing is a deceptive marketing practice where companies exaggerate or falsely claim environmental benefits.

Need

- Protect consumer trust – Prevent misleading environmental claims.
- Promote genuine sustainability – Encourage real environmental initiatives.
- Maintain ethical practices – Ensure honest communication in marketing.
- Regulatory compliance – Prevent violations of advertising and environmental laws.

Key Components

- Misleading environmental claims – Exaggerating environmental benefits without evidence.
- False eco-labels – Using unofficial certifications to appear sustainable.
- Lack of transparency – Hiding harmful environmental practices.

- Emphasis on minor initiatives – Highlighting small green actions while ignoring major impacts.

Examples

- Some fast-fashion brands claiming eco-friendly lines without major sustainability changes.

1. Socially Responsible Marketing

Example 1: Tata Tea – “Jaago Re” Campaign

Tata Tea launched the Jaago Re (Wake Up) campaign to encourage Indian citizens to be socially aware and responsible.

- The campaign initially focused on encouraging people to vote in elections.
- Later it addressed issues like corruption, gender inequality, and civic responsibility.
- Advertisements showed everyday citizens realizing the importance of participating in democracy.
- Instead of promoting the tea directly, the brand promoted social awakening.
- The message was: drinking Tata Tea “awakens” people to social issues.

Impact:

- The campaign helped millions of young voters register.
- Tata Tea positioned itself as a socially responsible brand concerned with national development.

Example 2: Mahindra Group – “Nanhi Kali” Initiative

Mahindra Group runs the Nanhi Kali program, focusing on education for underprivileged girls.

- The initiative is promoted through Mahindra’s branding and communication.
- Customers and employees are encouraged to sponsor girls’ education.

Impact:

- Thousands of girls have received educational support.
- The company strengthens its brand image as socially responsible.

2. Cause Marketing

Example: Lifebuoy – Help a Child Reach 5 Campaign

Lifebuoy launched the “Help a Child Reach 5” campaign to reduce child mortality caused by poor hygiene.

- Focused on handwashing with soap as a simple life-saving habit.
- A documentary-style advertisement showed a village where many children died before age five due to infections.
- The campaign connected Lifebuoy’s product (soap) with a public health cause.

- It promoted the idea that handwashing can prevent diseases.

Impact:

- Increased awareness about hygiene across India and other countries.
- Lifebuoy strengthened its position as a health and hygiene advocate.

3. Cause-Related Marketing - Partnership between a company and a nonprofit organization

Example 1: Airtel – “Educate a Child” Campaign

Airtel partnered with NGOs to support education for underprivileged children.

- Customers could contribute ₹1 or more while recharging their mobile phones.
- Airtel matched some of these contributions.
- The campaign linked customer transactions with donations to education programs.
- The initiative created a partnership between Airtel and nonprofit organizations.

Impact:

- Thousands of children received access to education.
- Airtel gained a positive brand image as a company supporting social causes.

Example 2: Amazon – Amazon Smile (India CSR initiatives)

Customers shopping on Amazon could support NGOs through selected initiatives.

- A portion of purchases was directed toward charitable organizations.

Impact:

- Encouraged consumers to contribute to social causes while shopping.

4. Internal Marketing - Marketing efforts directed toward employees

Example 1: Infosys – Employee Engagement and Training

Infosys focuses strongly on internal communication and employee development.

Practices:

- Extensive training programs through Infosys Leadership Institute.
- Transparent communication about company goals and strategy.
- Employee engagement programs to ensure workers understand the company’s mission.

Marketing Impact:

- Employees become brand ambassadors of Infosys.
- High employee satisfaction improves customer service and company reputation.

Example 2: Zappos style practices adapted by HCLTech

HCLTech implemented the “Employees First, Customers Second” philosophy.

Strategy:

- Empowering employees to make decisions.
- Transparent internal communication platforms.

Impact:

- Improved employee morale and productivity.
- Stronger customer service and brand loyalty.

5. Green Marketing

Example 1: ITC Limited – Paper and Packaging Sustainability

ITC promotes itself as an environmentally responsible company.

Green Initiatives:

- Afforestation programs to increase green cover in India.
- Eco-friendly paper manufacturing.
- Use of renewable energy in operations.

Marketing Strategy:

- The company highlights its environmental efforts in advertising and reports.

Impact:

- ITC claims to be carbon positive, water positive, and solid waste recycling positive.

Example 2: Tata Motors – Electric Vehicles

Tata Motors promotes electric vehicles such as the Nexon EV.

Green Marketing Strategy:

- Advertisements highlight zero tailpipe emissions.
- Focus on sustainable mobility and reduced pollution.

Impact:

- Positions Tata Motors as a leader in sustainable transportation in India.

6. Greenwashing - Misleading environmental claims

Greenwashing involves false or exaggerated claims about environmental benefits to appear eco-friendly.

Example 1: H&M – Conscious Collection Controversy

H&M marketed its “Conscious Collection” as environmentally friendly.

Issue:

- Critics argued that the brand still promotes fast fashion, which causes large environmental waste.

Why it is considered greenwashing:

- Only a small portion of products were sustainable.
- Marketing messages exaggerated environmental benefits.

Example 2: Volkswagen – Diesel Emissions Scandal

Volkswagen promoted its diesel vehicles as environmentally friendly and low-emission.

Issue:

- Investigations revealed the company installed software to cheat emission tests.

Impact:

- Huge fines and loss of consumer trust.
- Became one of the most cited examples of greenwashing globally.